Gold Cache at the Federal Reserve

At the Federal Reserve Bank in NYC, five stories below ground, 50 feet below sea level, and locked behind a 90 ton steel door, lies a maze of 122 vaults containing a stockpile of gold from the various nations of the world, deposited there for safekeeping. The weight of the vault and the gold inside is greater than the limits of almost any other foundation. A single compartment can house some 100,000 bricks of gold, each weighing approximately 30 lbs. and valued in six figures each. As of October 2001, it held the largest gold repository in the world with approximately 7,700 short tons of gold bullion, more than Fort Knox.

Each compartment is secured by a padlock, two combination locks and an auditor's seal. Compartments are numbered rather than named to maintain the confidentiality of the account holders.

Jesus tells us in Matthew 6:19-20:

¹⁹ "Do not store up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moths and vermin destroy, and where thieves break in and steal. ²⁰ But store up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where moths and vermin do not destroy, and where thieves do not break in and steal. NIV

The world's stockpile of riches seems pretty secure, buried five stories beneath the Federal Reserve Bank. After all, what threat do moths and rust pose to gold? And what are the odds of thieves breaking into the Federal Reserve? But Jesus' main point remains just as relevant today because our treasures may not leave us, but one day we will leave them.

I love you all,

Tim
