Abraham was being fully persuaded that God had power to do what He had promised. Roman 4:21

THE BIBLE SAYS

Trust God's Promises

Apostle Paul said, "Abraham never wavered in believing God's promise...He was fully convinced that God is able to do whatever he promises" (Romans 4:20-21). To believe the promises of God is more than simply knowing that God has made promises. It means trusting God enough to let His promises shape the way we think, live, and respond to His Word. The Bible repeatedly connects faith with trust. Hebrews 11:1 describes faith as "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Faith looks beyond what can be seen and places confidence in what God has said. It rests not merely upon the promise itself, but upon the character of the One who made the promise. God is faithful, and therefore His promises can be trusted.

Abraham's belief was not passive. He trusted God enough to act upon what God had told him. Therefore, believing God's promises entails trusting God, responding to God, and relying upon God. If God promises forgiveness, we trust in His ability to forgive. If He commands repentance, our love for Him causes us to repent. If He commands obedience, our faith in Him moves us to obey. If He promises eternal life, we live with hope and perseverance because we trust the One who made that promise.

The gospel calls us not merely to acknowledge that Jesus saves, but to place our trust in Him and respond to His Word. Ultimately, believing God's promises means taking God at His Word. It means trusting Him when circumstances seem contrary to what He has promised. It means obeying Him because we believe He knows what is best. And it means remaining faithful because we are convinced that God is able and willing to fulfill His promises. To believe God's promises is to trust the Promiser so completely that His promises become the foundation for our faith, our guide for our lives, and our hope for our eternity.
